Dear Student:

The President of the United States has many ideas he wishes to accomplish during his Presidency. One important idea he wishes to accomplish during his Presidency is to recognize important people in history, science, medicine, literature, etc. There have been numerous people who have made contributions to the United States through inventions, medicines, written works, service to their country, etc. Many important accomplishments have been made in literature, history, medicine, and science since our founding fathers wrote our constitution. Problem is, he is having a hard time narrowing down who gets the recognition and who doesn't.

To help with this situation, President Obama has created an Honor Council. The Council has been divided into four subgroups: Literature, History, Medicine, and Science. I, chair of the Science Honorary Council, am writing you because I hope to gain your help. The Science Honorary Council needs your help in the field of Science. You are being provided with a list of important people in Science. Please follow the instructions throughout this assignment and choose the person you think deserves the honor. Please write a letter of recommendation with your answer.

Yours truly,

Chair of the Science Council
